Local Company Does Land's End to John O'Groats For Mental Health Charity

A group of colleagues from the Greencore Salads site in Boston, together with colleagues from their sister site in Spalding, have embarked on a challenge to cover the equivalent of the journey from Land's End to John O'Groats, a total of 1,083 by walking, running or cycling during the month of April.

In doing so, they hope to raise £1,083 - £1 for each mile covered for charity.

All money raised will go to mental health charity, Mind, to support the invaluable work they do to support people struggling with mental health issues.

Greencore Boston, previously known as Freshtime, has been producing ready to eat salads and prepared vegetables out of its site on Marsh Lane for many years and is expanding its production and taking on new people to meet the increasing consumer demand.

Commenting on the fundraising, Chris O'Byrne, General Manager at Greencore Boston said:

"I'm very proud of the team for their drive and determination to raise money for Mind. Although they won't be going on the actual route from Land's End to John O'Groats, I know they will push each other along to reach the target of 1,083 miles and I hope they get the sponsorship to enable them to support the work that Mind does."
