Local Company Does Land's End to John O'Groats For Mental Health Charity

A group of colleagues from the Greencore Salads site in Spalding, together with colleagues from their sister site in Boston, have embarked on a challenge to cover the equivalent of the journey from Land's End to John O'Groats, a total of 1,083 by walking, running or cycling during the month of April.

In doing so, they hope to raise £1,083 - £1 for each mile covered for charity.

All money raised will go to mental health charity, Mind, to support the invaluable work they do to support people struggling with mental health issues.

Greencore Spalding has been producing coleslaw and other side of plate salads out of its site in Pinchbeck for many years and is expanding its production and taking on new people to meet the increasing consumer demand.

Commenting on the fundraising, Simon Titchner, General Manager at Greencore Spalding said:

"We know that many people struggle with mental health issues, particularly in the current environment. Our colleagues wanted to offer their support for an organisation that has supported so many people. Unfortunately current restrictions make it difficult for them to do the actual trip from Land's End to John O'Groats, but being a resourceful group of people they have taken it upon themselves to set out the challenge and to meet their targets in their own way".
